Abstract

The Open Access movement seeks to make scholarly, peer-reviewed journal articles freely available to anyone, anywhere over the World Wide Web. There were some very significant developments in the area of Open Access (OA) in 2004, including statements by major funders in support of Open Access. There are now so many Open Access scholarly journal articles freely available, that, in the author's opinion, being aware of, and using, the resources and related tools is now essential for libraries. Libraries can provide more resources faster for users by supplementing paid resources with ones that are Open Access.

Library resources, such as link resolvers, are beginning to incorporate Open Access materials and web searches for Open Access materials. For example, the reSearcher software suite includes Open Access collections along with subscription-based resources in the CUFTS journals knowledgebase, and a web search for an Open Access copy of an article in the GODOT link resolver. SFX also incorporates Open Access journals. After exhausting more traditional resources, interlibrary loans staff are beginning to include Google searching in their workflow.

This article will discuss what Open Access is, the dramatic growth of Open Access, and major collections, resources and tools. Implications, issues, and leadership opportunities for resource sharing specialists will be explored.

Keywords:	Open Access, reSearcher, link resolver, knowledge database, trends in interlibrary loans, leadership, self-archiving
Subjects:	B. Information use and sociology of information. > BG. Information dissemination and diffusion.

Breaking the Mould: How Re-examining the Allocation Formula Led to the Creation of a Dynamic Role for the University's Librarians

Terrence Paris

Abstract

A modestly conceived proposal to change a long established allocation formula rapidly evolved into a new model of library service. The new model created five discipline funds groups: Humanities, Social Sciences, Sciences, Educational Studies and Business Studies and the assignment of liaison tasks to the five professional librarians and the archivist. The goal of creating a fairer allocation was superseded by more substantive goals intended to: loosen the ties of collections funding to 24 departments by funding groups of cognate disciplines and unique programs of interdisciplinary instruction and research; involve all librarians in the task of collection analysis and development; redefine librarian positions to promote their contribution as full partners with classroom faculty in solving problems and improving research and teaching. Along with improved collections, the ultimate goal is a full integration of the librarians' professional expertise with the University's newly drafted strategic plan.

The screenshot shows the DOAJ website interface. At the top, the browser address bar displays 'http://www.doaj.org/'. The DOAJ logo is prominently displayed on the left, with the text 'DIRECTORY OF OPEN ACCESS JOURNALS' to its right. A navigation menu on the left includes links for 'Find Journals', 'New titles', 'Find articles', 'Suggest a journal', 'About', 'FAQ', 'News', 'Sponsors', 'Membership', and 'Contact'. Below this menu, there are sections for 'For journal owners' and 'For authors'. The main content area features a welcome message, a search bar with a 'Find journals' button, and two browsing options: 'Browse by title' with a list of letters A-Z, and 'Browse by subject' with an 'Expand Subject Tree' button. A list of subject categories is displayed on the right side of the page.

- Why OA?
- Canadian Journal of Sociology highly regarded internationally - but subscriptions falling
- To increase visibility & use of the journal

Creating a journal

Editorial board - sets policy

- Journal name
- Open access / creative commons licensing
- Scope of journal
- Peer Review
- Sections and Content - news, book reviews
- Names? May help recruit authors & readers (but may be too busy to work)

Editor(s)

- At least one!
- Journal Management
- Assigning & coordinating peer review
- Layout
- Copyediting
- Recruiting content
- Journal Promotion

Recruiting Authors & Reviewers

- Talk to experts that you know or meet
- Interesting conference presentation?
- People like to hear that their ideas might be worth publishing, or that you think they have expertise & could review
- Send a call to people or a list you know

Opening Pandora's box: How technologies of communication and cognition may be shifting towards a 'Psycho-Civilized Society'

Increasingly there are indications that the uses of wireless technologies have been developed to target an individual's biological body, with specific focus upon the neuronal functioning of the brain. This paper examines how some of these uses have had detrimental effects, and what this implies for both present and upcoming developments for particular wireless/sensor technologies. Are we seeing a trend towards a psycho-civilised society, where greater emphasis is placed upon social control and pre-emptive strategies?

Canadian Journal of Midwifery Research and Practice -Revue Canadienne de la Recherche et de la Pratique Sage-femme

The Canadian Journal of Midwifery Research and Practice (CJMRP) is Canada's national, peer-reviewed midwifery journal. This professional Journal provides a venue for the publication of research relevant to midwives and midwifery practice. It is the official journal of the Canadian Association of Midwives (CAM) and is supported by midwives from all regions of Canada.

Research articles, literature reviews, abstracts, case reports, and articles presenting clinical management strategies will be assessed through the peer review process. The CJMRP also publishes social science research focused on midwives and midwifery from disciplines such as anthropology, economics, education, geography, history, political science, psychology, social policy, and sociology. The CJMRP is primarily interested in material relevant to the profession's practice, policy and organization. The co-editors of the Canadian Journal of Midwifery Research and Practice are Patricia McNiven and Kathrin Stoll. Topics in Scholarly Communications

A practice journal created by students in LIBR559L: Issues in Scholarly Communication and Publishing.

This journal is a working tool being used by SLAIS 559L students from February-April 2008 to gain knowledge of the specific publishing processes of Open Access electronic journals. Student practice focuses on the submission and peer review process, publication decisions and acceptance as well as the publishing guidelines and policies requisite to bringing a scholarly journal to publication in an open access environment.

Each student has contributed a one page draft manuscript on the subject of Open Access and scholarly publishing to facilitate the peer review process. These articles are not concerned with quality or integrity of research but are being used only as practice papers to conduct a full editorial review. A final revised version of each paper will be uploaded for distribution at the term's end (April 2008).

In addition to uploading the one page article, students may also choose to include their class term papers and presentation slides at the end of term.

Those interested in finding out more about the SLAIS 559L practice journal should contact the editor.

Everyone is entitled to their personal opinions. One cannot be defined by what others may say or think, but rather by what he or she may say or do. By definition, we are The Pink Voice...together.

The Pink Voice is an online journal published yearly. Welcome to our second edition. Topics include creative writing, found poems, philosophical thoughts, fashion, and a continuous story. Authors of The Pink Voice are all grade nine and ten girls from Gladstone Secondary School, Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. We'd like to thank Dr. John Willinsky from the University of British Columbia for his generous support.
