Our objective: study about research data services in this type of library settings (America and Europe). Previously, the Carol Tenopir's team reviews the situation in North America and Canada. The aim of our work is to build a list with the essential data services for the small libraries with a little budget, and describe the European situation.

Method: select the best institutions by bibliography and expert opinion, and the medium by regional criterion and DOAR review; check their web sites looking for the RDS; classify them by Tenopir's team work.

Conclusion: The three essential services that all the academic libraries must offer as default are: consulting with faculty, staff or students on data management plans and metadata standards, and preparing data sets for deposit into a repository.
